

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Great Activity Manifested In Behalf of the Cherry City

The regular monthly meeting of the Salem Board of Trade was held at its rooms last evening, and considerable business of importance was transacted.

The first and most important matter brought to the attention of the members present was the report of F. N. Derby, chairman of the pamphlet committee. That gentleman reported that all the matter, excepting a few pictures, has been completed and that the new pamphlet will be ready for public distribution within the current month.

At the request of the state fair officials it was asked that persons wishing to accommodate roomers during fair week should report, and upon motion the secretary was instructed to publish notices in the local newspapers, requesting persons having rooms to spare to leave their names, with the nature of their accommodations, at the Board of Trade office, where the information will be supplied to visitors seeking rooms.

Upon motion the Board of Trade was authorized to bear half of the expense with the Salem Business Men's League for hanging flags and decorating our streets for fair week.

The Hon. John Q. Wilson brought up the subject of the bicycle nuisance on the sidewalks of our city, and made the point that it was a great detriment to our city to have wheels allowed on the sidewalks. The discussion of this subject became general and while there was considerable sympathy manifested for the bicycle rider, the consensus seemed to be that it is a bad advertisement among strangers and visitors in our city to see the wheels on our sidewalks. In fact Salem is believed to be one of the very few places in America where this is permitted. Mr. Stolz, who is a member of the council, reported that during his recent travels in twenty-three different states, he has no where found bicycles on the sidewalks. He confessed that the problem was a serious one, but as a remedy suggested the experiment of Stockton, California. Their ordinance provides that every rider of a wheel shall dismount when passing a pedestrian on the sidewalks. This suggestion seemed to meet with general approval, and upon motion Councilman Stolz was asked to have framed and submitted to the council an ordinance along the line of that in force in Stockton.

The subject of keeping the board of trade rooms open evenings was advocated, and upon motion the executive committee was authorized to make the necessary arrangements. All present were well pleased with the progress being made by our local board of trade. The display of fruit prepared by Secretary Poissal, who had the assistance of Fruit Inspector Armstrong, was highly praised by every one, and it is believed that under existing conditions no better specimens of fruit and vegetables could be produced anywhere. In fact the public feeling regarding the board of trade and its work is very rapidly growing in favor of the organization. Scores of letters are being received constantly from Eastern states inquiring about this place. These are being answered by the secretary, who now has the assistance of a stenographer, and every applicant is being supplied with literature concerning

THE TEMPLE OF HEAVEN IN PEKING

There are many unique and interesting sights in the city of Peking—perhaps more than in any other Asiatic city, says the Rev. G. W. Sheppard, writing in the Quiver.

Its position as the metropolis of a great empire, its ancient and modern history, its magnificent wall, its imposing gates with their lofty towers are among the things which gave it title to fame and fascination to the traveler. But Peking has no more attractive feature than the temples wherein the religions of the Chinese people are seen perhaps in their best and purest forms.

The most important of these temples—indeed, the most important religious edifice in the empire—is the temple of Heaven, where the emperor, "the Son of Heaven," worships and sacrifices in person to the Power above, whose vice-regent he claims to be.

The temple of Heaven is situated

ELMER E. BROWN.

New United States commissioner of education, graduate of the University of Michigan and former professor in the University of California.

In the center of a park at the southern gate of the city, about three miles from the imperial palaces. As heaven is believed to be round (and the earth square), the boundary walls, the buildings and the altars of the temple are circular in shape. The park is enclosed by a high red wall, and the gates are kept shut. The park is planted with groves of pine and fir trees (evergreens, suggestive of perennial freshness). A second wall surrounds the sacred buildings, and within it a thick copse of splendid cypress trees casts a solemn shadow on the famous shrines.

The visitor to the temple is first led to the "Chi Ku Tan," or Altar for Prayer for Grain. This is a triple terrace of white marble, with steps and beautifully carved balustrades. On the top of the altar stands a magnificent circular building, which has been commonly called by foreigners the Temple of Heaven. Its real designation, however, is "Chi Nieu Eien," or Temple of Prayer for the year.

This elaborate triple-roofed house of prayer has been declared to be the most beautiful building in China. Its roofs are of rich blue glazed tiles, surmounted by a golden ball, the height being just 100 feet (Chinese measurement) from the top of the altar. The windows are shaded by dangling strings of blue glass beads. The woodwork of the interior is richly carved and overlaid with gold. There is but one seat, that which the emperor occupies when at the winter solstice he supplicates for Heaven's blessing on the harvests of the coming year.

Before the visitor passes to the next great sight he is shown the exterior of the imperial ancestral hall, where the tablets of the predecessors of the present reigning house are kept.

To this building there is no admission, but permission is given to enter the hall of fasting, where his majesty fasts during the night preceding the great sacrificial ceremony at the "Tien Tan" or Altar of Heaven.

This, the most sacred spot of all, is also a triple terrace of white marble court. Its base is 210 feet in open court. Its base is 210 feet in diameter, the middle terrace 150 feet and the upper one 90 feet. A curious use of the number three and its multiples may be noticed in all these arrangements. The upper surfaces of the altar are paved with marble slabs laid in concentric circles. The topmost surface has nine rings of slabs and a round one in the center. It is upon this single round stone, in the center of this plateau of beautiful snow-white marble, that the emperor kneels three times, and each time brings his forehead thrice to the ground. And there, beneath the open canopy of the heavens, his majesty utters his prayer.

The service takes place at the dawn of day, and is accompanied by the burning of bullocks and silks in the furnaces and braziers, which stand a short distance from the foot of the altar. The significance of this, the state religion of China, is difficult to determine. The ceremony has been performed by successive emperors for probably more than 4000 years.—London Globe.

NO MORE DEATHS FROM GAS

Wonderful Automatic Gas Cut-Off Being Displayed in Salem

Wm. Davidson, representing the Campbell automatic safety gas cut-off, is in the city, and will exhibit the wonderful invention of his company for several weeks. As is well known, there is considerable danger in the use of gas, such as the light being blown out accidentally or otherwise, and the object of this invention is to have the gas absolutely turned off as soon as the flame is extinguished. The invention is that of Victor E. Campbell, formerly of Goldenale, Washington, and is by many considered to be one of the greatest inventions of the age.

While Mr. Campbell has always been of an inventive turn of mind, it was not until the asphyxiation of Miss Elida Wilbur, at San Francisco, California, February 16, 1898, that Mr. Campbell decided to take up the work of solving the problem of a safety gas burner, and while Miss Wilbur was but an acquaintance of the family, the anxiety of her friends and her lingering illness and unconsciousness for two years following the accident before her death, only added inspiration to the work undertaken by Mr. Campbell, and he resolved never to give up the work until his efforts had proven successful and an absolute safe gas burner had been an accomplished fact.

During fair week this wonderful invention will be displayed at the pavilion, and demonstrations will also be made at the A. L. Fraser plumbing establishment adjoining the Board of Trade rooms. After the fair is over demonstrations will be continued at the latter place, and everyone interested is invited to inspect the invention.

She Described Her.

A few nights ago a Denver young man, who lives downtown, went out to Sixteenth avenue to call on a girl. He had seen the girl but once before. The call was arranged by a mutual acquaintance. When he reached the neighborhood he discovered that he had forgotten her number. He knew about where she lived, however, and went to a house near Sixteenth and Downing to make some inquiries. After he had rung the bell he found to his dismay that he could not remember her name. A lady came to the door. The young man took a long chance.

"Would you kindly tell who lives in that house across the street?" he asked.

She told him. It was not the name. He asked about another house and failed again. Then he smiled and explained.

"I am to call on a girl out this way," he said, "and I have forgotten both her house number and her name. She's a medium-sized girl."

The woman was amused. "How does she look?" she asked.

"She has blonde hair."

"Oh, has she blonde hair and does she wear a brown dress, a sailor hat with a light blue band and a brown sidecomb on one side and one slightly darker on the other?"

"I—I think so," said the youth.

"And does she like to tell you how many times she has been to California and New York?"

"Perhaps. I—I think she does."

"And has she a small mole—one you'd hardly notice—on her right cheek?"

"Let me see. I'm not sure about—"

"Well, does her dress always hang badly in the back?"

"Perhaps it does. I—"

"I think I know the girl you mean. It's Miss So-and-So. She lives right over there next to the corner," said the woman.

"Thank you," said the bewildered youth. It was the girl.—Denver Post.

Outdoor Restaurants in Paris.

The Pre Catalan is the newest of the smart restaurants in the Bois.

The Pre Catalan used to be a farm where children and a few fashionable ladies used to drink milk in the early morning, and there always had been a chalet restaurant at its entrance. The proprietor of one of the most popular Paris newspapers saw that the children were monopolizing one of the most charming inclosures in the Bois, and he obtained the right to build a restaurant and lay out a garden there.

The restaurant is a great banquet hall with a cupola in the center. Large mirrors on one side reflect the long windows on the other, and the big room, all white and ornamented with great taste, might well have been copied from some palace. The servants wear quiet handsome liveries, and the carte du jour has the prices marked against the various dishes, information which some of the restaurants do not give to their clients until the bill is presented. The Pre Catalan has a lawn, which is a favored spot at tea-time on race days.

The Pavillon d'Armenonville, another of the Bois restaurants, has always been in high favor with smart Paris. It has been the custom since its building that men shall wear dress clothes when dining at this restaurant, an unwritten rule which has not been enforced in any other restaurant.

When the very broad glass shelter which runs around the house is filled with diners, the ladies in dinner dresses and plumed and feathered hats, the men in their evening black and white, when the tables are heaped with flowers, when the trees outside are garlanded with colored lanterns, when the two bands, playing alternately, make gentle music which does not interfere with conversation, then Armenonville forms a scene brilliant enough for any theater to stage. The luxurious surroundings have, of course, to be paid for, but though the prices at these little palaces in the great wood are high, they are not exorbitant.

At the Chateau de Madrid the tables are set in a lawn in a great courtyard, and there is a pleasant feeling of mystery in the dark surroundings of big trees and dimly seen buildings. The Pavillon Royal, at the near end of the lake in the Bois, used to be a bourgeois restaurant, where one might breakfast and dine in comparatively humble company at a comparatively humble rate. It now aspires to be smart, and with the advent of the haute cuisine its prices have shown a corresponding rise.

The Cascade Cafe restaurant is a gay little pavilion near the Longchamp race course. Its lawn is dotted with innumerable little tables. Other little chalets restaurants there are in the Bois, but I have written of the principal ones.

The Pavillon Bleu at St. Cloud, at the foot of the terraced slope, is a very cheerful restaurant, and some of the grand vins of the Maison Doree were bought by M. Moreaux at the sale and sent to the St. Cloud cellars. The Pavillon Henri IV at St. Germain is owned by the proprietor of the Restaurant Champeaux, and I have always found the food excellent there.

There are other restaurants besides the Porte Jaune in the Bois de Vincennes, one on an island in the Lac de Saint-Mande being amusing on Sundays and holidays. There is a little restaurant on the Isle de la Jatte which acquired a reputation for good breakfasts when the island was a favorite ground for duellists to settle affairs of honor; and any one who wishes to see the Parisian counterpart of our Hampstead can dine on a platform amidst the foliage of the big trees at Sceaux-Robinson, and can pull up to his eyrie the basket, containing cold fowl and bottle of red wine and a yard of bread by a rope.—London Pall Mall Gazette.

STORM VISITS SOUTH

DOES MUCH DAMAGE

Lightning Strikes Twice In Tacoma Streets Are Flooded In Both and Tacoma—Half An Inch In 16 Minutes

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 12.—The heaviest rainfall Seattle has known washed out the main street cable line yesterday morning, crippled the car service on 13 cent lines, did $15,000 worth damage to street improvements under way, and caused a heavy property loss.

Within 16 minutes half an inch of water fell, and between 9 and 10 when the storm broke, and of one and one-fifth inches of rain had descended. All during the afternoon a steady downpour continued, but the damage was done this morning's big downpour.

Regrade work is under way on Fourth avenue and on Main street. The heavy rush of water washed out the supports to the track and the rails were twisted of shape and the roadbed was away. A cable car with 20 passengers was halted at Fourth just as the tracks below gave. All the cable lines were stopped a short time and 10 electric cars had to suspend temporarily.

Tacoma, Sept. 12.—During the heaviest rain and light storms that the Pacific Northwest has ever known, about noon today, lightning struck and tore down from the flag pole on top of city hall tower, struck the house tower and followed it an elevator shaft, doing slight damage to the police and fire alarm system, but no serious damage. Some of the telegraph and telephone lines.

The storm came up very suddenly. During the forenoon a six-mile wind had been blowing from the southwest. Suddenly it shifted and blew a rate of 14 miles from the north. The warring currents darkened the sky until it was necessary to turn on the lights, and at 11:15 came rain, one of the heaviest in months. The water for a time poured.

In less than two hours 64 inches fell. The streets were flooded. Pacific avenue looked like a lake and at many street corners the storm sewers were spouting water from the hill districts. Lightning struck a city light transformer at the corner of Eleventh and J streets at noon, and one woman was stunned by the shock.

Old residents, men who have lived in Tacoma for 20 years, say never saw such a storm before.

A case is the foundation of Chamberlain's Cough Syrup. Mrs. S., Great Falls, Montana, writes: "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Syrup in my family for years—my children never suffer with coughs." Sold by D. J. Stone.

Chemical Saved Building

A fire alarm was turned in to Union and Church streets this morning about 10:30 o'clock. The boys responded promptly, and found the Silas Reynolds house, at Union street, with its roof ablaze. The chemical engine was quickly put into action and the flames subdued before any damage was done to the furniture or interior of the building. The loss was confined to the roof of the dwelling, and will probably not exceed $50.
